Do Companies Still Need CISOs?
The role of the CISO today is that of a Swiss-knife, a one-man band who should be able to do everything: manage its team (when there is one), advise the CIO, control IT, advise the business, do 1st and 2nd line of defense tasks, juggle with technical skills, governance skills, report to the Board, talk to the CFO, the executive committee. Meanwhile, security is still not embedded by design which requires this fireman position. Is there a workaround?
